Nullius in verba

Rules to publish on Philosophical Transactions:

- Data must be published together with the article to give others the possibility to test conclusions
- Before publication, article must be evaluated and approved by 2 experts to check originality and solidness of the article

"Nullius in verba" is the expression used to describe this process ("on the word of no one" or "take nobody's word for it") and this became also the motto of the Royal Society

Open Science vs Open Access

- The first scientific journal used "peer review" and ask for "open data"
- Something went awry during centuries!!!
- Open Access is only one of the part of the Open Science philosophy:

Green open access additional duties

- From the researcher point of view, there are today various actions going versus an Open World
- Green OA, Gold OA, diamond OA, institutional repositories, cloud, archives these are only some of the words entered into scientific life
- European Commission now ask to publish project results into OA journals and data must be available into trusted archives (like Zenodo)
- Institutional repository is the right way to ensure green open access of scientific results but ...
- Unfortunately, all these aspects are too often the umpteenth problems for the researcher traditionally lazy for administrative stuff (use of many repositories, additional duties)
